New Phase of Superpower Contest: Missile Strength and Public Opinion

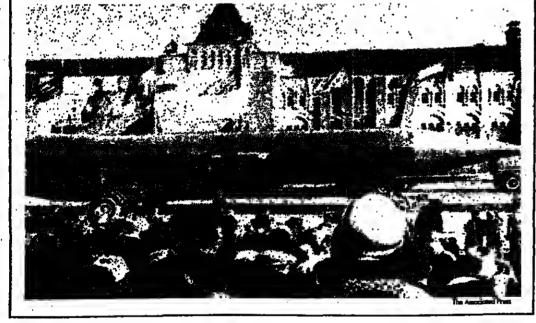

The Soviet Union responded to President Reagan's proposal for elimination of most intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe by saying the plan was a sinister proposal to mislead "unknowing people." Mr. Reagan said that the United States would cancel deployment of the Cruise missile, similar to that above, and the Pershing-2, right, if the Soviet Union would dismantle turee types of missiles — the SS-4, below, and SS-5, bettern and the proposed of the SS-4. bottom, and the powerful new SS-20 now being deployed by

But Izvestia concluded that Mr. Reagan's key policy was to create "a propaganda cushion" to absorb "adverse political consequences" of his policies. It identified them as the pursuit of "a fresh round in the nuclear missile race, deploying new U.S. missiles in Europe and preparing a limited nuclear war on the Continent." In Washington, the Democratic-led House Thursday landed President Rengan for his bold "mitiative for peace." But Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger cantioned that the new offer to Moscow did not mean Mr. Reagan would relent in his commitment to "rearm America."

"The president is most anxious to get into negotiations that can result in something effective for the world, but you can't do that from a position of weakness," he said. By coincidence, Mr. Reagan's speech came on the eve of the official holiday of Soviet missile forces, and Thursday's press was filled with articles about a "qualitatively new level of development" reached by the Soviet armed forces.

Moscow Assails Arms Plan

By Dusko Doder

Washington Post Service
MOSCOW — The Soviet Union began a major new drive Thursday to counter the impact of President Reagan's arms control proposals by portraying them as an attempt to "deceive" public opinion and undermine President Leonid L Brezhnev's coming visit to Bonn.

Initial Western reaction to the president's speech Wednesday appeared to have prompted concern here that Moscow could lose the momentum it believed it had achieved in encouraging Western European opposition to the sta-tinning of new U.S. medium-range

A rasb of commentaries Thursday appeared designed to maintain that momentum by renewed ex-ploitation of Mr. Reagan's recent remarks that "an exchange of tactical nuclear weapons" in Europe was conceivable without escalating into an all-out exchange between the United States and the Soviet

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — The House has easily defeated efforts to block the two main new strategic weapons President Reagan has called for - the B-1 bomber and the MX

Helped by the argument that the president needs the new plane for bargaining, the B-1 was approved by a vote of 263-142 Wednesday night during debate on the defense appropriations bill.

The B-I and MX were the most controversial items in a bill intended to appropriate $197.4 billion to the Defense Department for fiscal 1982. That was about $3.4 billion less than Mr. Reagan requested and $11 billion under the amount approved Tuesday by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, Democrat of New York, chairman of the appropriations subcommittee that produced the bill, had managed to impose cuts in the Pentagon budget within that panel, but on the floor Wednesday night he failed by wide margins. He said at one point that he wanted to delete money for Cruise missiles but realized such an amendment wouldnot have a chance "because nobody cares about the facts."

Rep. Addabbo offered the amendment to delete $1.8 billion for the B-I bomber on the ground that the money would be better spent on the radar-evading Stealth aircraft now under development.

"The B-1 is a bummer of a bomber," asserted Rep. Addabbe; declaring they will cost at least $300 million each and could not be ready in quantity much sooner that the less vulnerable Stealth "We have the direct testimony"

"We have information that Stealth was not properly funded" by the Defense Department for fear the advanced plane would get in the way of the B-1, which the Air Force prizes, he said.

"The B-1 is just as much a paper airplane as the Stealth," argued Rep. Addabbo.

U.S. Officials Believe South Africa Bought Nuclear Fuel From China

By George Lardner Jr. Don Oberdorfer

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - U.S. officials are convinced that recent mysterious shipments of enriched uranium for South Africa's nuclear program originated in China, which is anything but a friend of the Pretoria regime.

withholding nuclear fuel from South Africa as part of its effort to induce Pretoria to agree to international inspection of its nuclear facilities. The acquisition of enriched uranium from another source effectively undercut the U.S. campaign.

Earlier Shipment

The reported Chinese shipment to South Africa is not the first Chinesc transfer of nuclear material abroad that seemed to complicate the U.S. campaign to prevent the spread of atomic weapons.

In an earlier transaction, Peking reportedly supplied Argentina with heavy water for nuclear plants as well as low- and mediumenriched uranium. Argentina and Brazil have been the center of U.S. efforts to block nuclear prolifera-tion in Latin America. That Chinese action brought a strong but private protest from the United States, sources said

Because of the large output of China's gaseous diffusion plants, which produce material for its nuclear weapons program. China is reported to have at least a temporary surplus of enriched uranium. That is worth a lot of money on the world market, especially from countries seeking to avoid the strict regulation imposed by the United States and other suppliers. tors for a year. South Africa is well along in developing its own facilities for enrichment of natural uranium. While the plant is believed to have sufficient capacity to make enriched uranium for at least one atomic bomb, it is not believed capable of initially supplying two new power reactors.

It is possible that the reported Chinese shipment could meet South Africa's pressing needs until its own enrichment plant is working well enough to supply the reactors, sources said.

A problem for South Africa is a

Bishops Back Anti-Abortion Bill In U.S., but Moderate Their Stand

By Russell Chandler

Las Angeles Times Service
WASHINGTON — The nation's Roman Catholic bishops have closed ranks to back specific antiabortion legislation despite earlier opposition from more conservative bishops who had sought a much stronger stand on the issue.

The 284 prelates attending their annual conference also began on Wednesday to undertake what is expected to be a yearlong study and debate on the moral issues of nuclear war and disarmament. The unexpected clash over strategies to combat legalized abortion erupted Monday at the opening session, triggered by the decision of the conference's Administrative Committee to put the entire body on record as supporting the con-troversial amendment sponsored by Sen. Ortin G. Hatch, Republican of Utah. His measure, if passed, would take the abortion issue away from the courts and allow Congress and individual states the right to legislate about it. The bishops' backing of the Hatch Amendment was originally announced Nov. 5 before the Senate Subcommittee on the Constitution, by Cardinal Terence Cooke of New York and Archbishop John R. Roach, president of the U.S. Bishops Conference. The announcement had generated mounting criticism among the church's conservative "right-to-life" advo-cates. Critics said the amendment failed to recognize the full legal and personal rights of the unborn and weakened the church's antiabortion stand.

Cardinal Humberto Medeiros of Boston, declaring, "It is very painful for me to take this stand," was Was among those who asserted Mon-day that the Hatch Amendment did not live up to the church's traditional position for a national abortion ban. But on Wednesday, Bishop Jo-

The bishops' stand comes at a time when a variety of polls show that many Roman Catholic lay members disagree with their church's position.

Soviet Assessments

Much of what was written was devoted to assessments of the East-West balance, with figures showing the East slightly behind in most areas, including the number of soldiers on active duty as well as the numbers of those deployed in Cen-

While dismissing figures advanced by Mr. Reagan Wednesday as "mysterious" and "fantastic," the Russians kept a tone of reason ableness and moderation in their comments.

Investigators in U.S. Are Said to Clear Allen

By Charles R. Babcock and Martin Schram

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - Justice Department prosecutors have recommended that the investigation of President Reagan's national securi-ty adviser, Richard V. Allen, be closed without the appointment of a special prosecutor, sources say. FBI had uncovered no transition that Mr. Allen committed a crime The sources said Wednesday the journalist intended for Nancy

But Mr. Alien's problems within the White House appeared far from resolved, as knowledgeable sources said that a number of presidential advisers were counseling that Mr. Allen showed such bad judgment in his handling of the in-cident that he was a liability and ought to be dismissed.

The White House may have added to its problems by disclosing that presidential commeter Edwin Meese 3d was told privately by the FBI that its investigation had uncovered no wrongdoing. Other sources said the FBI director, Wil-liam H. Webster, told Mr. Meese about the case. This contradicted previous White House statements that officials there had not contacted the FBI. It also apparently contradicts Reagan administration internal policy that contact between the White House and the Justice Department should be through the White House counsel, Fred F. Fielding, or the attorney general.

Review Is Ending

Sources familiar with the investigation said an FBI preliminary review of the matter had been completed and that attorneys for the department's public integrity section had decided the case did not trigger the provisions of the Ethics in Government Act requir-ing appointment of a special pro-

Attorney General William French Smith is out of town until next week, however, and oo final decision on the recommendation will be made until after he returns,

An early White House statement on the matter said the money was offered to Mrs. Reagan by reporters for a Japanese magazine who interviewed her on Jan. 21, the day : after Mr. Reagan's inauguration. ... Mr. Allen said he gave the money ... to a secretary for safekeeping until he could find the right procedure for turning the money over to the government. Instead, the cash remained in a safe for eight months.

The incident has been compli-cated from the beginning because the White House has had to correct its statements. White House spokesmen said at first that Mr. Allen had been cleared, only to be contradicted by a Justice Department spokesman who said the matter was still under review.

Story Changed

Tuesday the White House changed its story on when President Reagan had first learned of the FBI inquiry. Spokesmen said at first that he learned of it only last week. Now they say he knew since the money was first discov-ered in mid-September.

That version became confused again Wednesday when Mr. Reagan startled his advisers by re-marking, on the occasion of accepting a live Thanksgiving holi-day turkey from the National Tur-key Federation, that the Allen matter had been "investigated" and that "everything was fine."

About five hours later, the White House issued a statement of clarification that said: "The president referred to an initial oral FBI report which was provided to Ed Meese for guidance as to whether any administrative action was nec-essary. This is the same information that was referred to in the statement of Friday morning, Nov.

This clarification was further clarified by Larry Speakes, the deputy press secretary. He said Mr. Meese recalled that just after Nov. 1 an official from the FBI tel-ephoned Mr. Meese about the Al-

Mr. Meese "presumably briefed the president" on that conversation, Mr. Speakes added, and said that mee wheelst administration of the president of the presiden said that was what the president was talking about Wednesday.

Gergen Comment

Last Friday morning. White House spokesman David R. Ger-gen initially said that Mr. Allen had been cleared of wrongdoing by the Justice Department and that the case was closed. Justice officials challenged that, saying the case was still under review.

By Friday afternoon, Mr. Ger-gen retracted his original contention, saying instead that the case was still open and that Mr. Fielding had mistakenly told him that the case was closed although he had never talked with FBI or Justice Department officials.

-Judiciary Committee has complet ... ed action on a proposed new criminal code, agreeing on a compro-mise that angered the Moral Maispectrum and the American Civil Liberties Union on the other.

Two conservative Republican members of the committee, Jeremiah Denton, of Alabama, and John P. East, of North Carolina, withdrew as sponsors of the legislation after a committee majority refused to go along with a number of pro-posed amendments, including one for a federal death penalty.

The proposed code, adopted 11-5 on Wednesday, would virtually abolish parole, provide for preven-tive detention before trial and set up uniform sentencing guidelines.

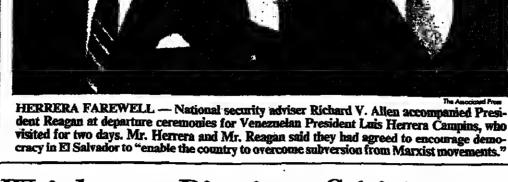

Chairman Strom Thurmond, Republican of South Carolina, went along with requests not to include many of the more controversial items, including the death penalty, n relaxation of federal gun control laws and a stiffer labor violence law, for fear that they would trigger filibusters that would kill the bill.

But he said he supports many of WASHINGTON — The Senate them personally and promised that each would be dealt rate legislation.

David Landau of the ACLU said his group opposes the senteno-ing provisions, which it said will result in substantially longer terms of imprisonment; provisions that would allow the government to ap-peal sentences it considers too leuient; the tougher obscenity laws, and provisions for detention without bail that the ACLU considers unconstitutional

The Moral Majority has charged that the code will provide shorter sentences for convicted criminals. That opposition is centered on a proposal to reduce maximum jail terms across the board in combinavirtually end chances for parole ex-cept for a possible 10-percent re-duction for good behavior.

Conservatives on the committee did win approval for some amend-ments sought by the Moral Majori-ty, especially in the area of obscenity laws, broader definitions for rape and longer terms of imprisonment for rape.

Peru's Leader Charts Modern-Day Conquest Of the Amazon Basin

Dreamer by Temperament

Mr. Belaunde, an architect, but Mr. Regained, an architect, our a dreamer by temperament, visualizes a technological conquest of the Amazon Basin, uniting the highways systems of Brazil and Peru, and linking the Amazon with the Paragnay-Parana River to the south and the Ormoco to the north in an umbroken waterway from Buenos Aires to Venezuela's Caribbean coast.

Last month, Mr. Belaunde flew representatives of nine South American countries that share these river systems up to Iquitos, the main Peruvian Amazon city on the Maranou River, which receives ocean-going ships that enter the Amazon in Brazil, 2,000 kilometers to the east. He likened his plan for an integrated South American river transport system, studded with hydroelectric power stations, and con-nected with highways from the At-lantic to the Pacific, to the U.S. inland waterway from New Or-center, and unity the Western Hemisphere.

Self-sufficient and invulnerable, the hemisphere of peace would be able, by its power and its resources, to prevent a new world conflagration." he said in a speech

Later, Mr. Belaunde mused aloud in his office at the Tupac Amaru presidential palace in Lima on how U.S. strategic planners would regard his Amazon River

"I do hope they will understand how important this is," he said.

But while Mr. Belaunde's dreams are in the Amazon, less than 5 percent of Peru's 18 million people live there, and the rest are spread over the impoverished An-dean highlands and the Pacific coast, which has received a huge migration since 1960.

One of the goals of the Amizon development plan is to reverse this trend, and the census taken this year shows a slowdown in the migration to the coast. For a long time, however, the coast and high-lands are where Peru's industry, banking mining agriculture and fisheries will continue to concen-trate a population that is increasingly urban, politically agitated, underemployed, and very young (40 percent are younger than 15

Two Great Assets

Mr. Beisande, now in his second presidency, has two great assets as a political leader. He is viewed by any taint of personal tanancial gain from public office, and he is articulate communicator of democratic ideals and visions of a better day tomorrow for the children of the poor majorities.

In a developing country like Peru, impoverished millions are beset by terrible problems of unemployment, urban squalor, up-rooting by migration of traditional cultures, disease and illiteracy.

But modernization has also brought hope, which many parents project through their children, Expanded access to public health care and education have reduced infant mortality and provided a means for social mobility.

But hopes and dreams are buf-feted by the harsh realities in Peru, which include not only endemic social problems but radicalized political movements that have a violent revolutionary dream of social

Tough Economic Fro

After 14 months of Mr. Be-aunde's government, things are not going very well for Peru on the economic front.

Inflation is raising prices at an annual rate of 70 percent. The government, which promised to create 1 million new jobs in four years, has been spending much more than current revenue, with a probable budget deficit of over $2 billion this year, or more than 7 percent of gross national product.

Mr. Belaunde is not a strong administrator, and the task of running the government falls mainly to Manuel Ulloa, who is both chief of Cabinet and unnister of finance. The tall, former international banker, who towers over the average Peruvian, is suffering from an ulcer, which is a reflection of the economic woes, constant strikes. economic woes, constant strikes, parliamentary interrogations, and other problems.

It was a summer evening in 1891. The night train left Paris-Est at 8.25pm. Aboard was William C. Fargo of American Express, carrying the world's first travellers cheque. A great idea had found its time.

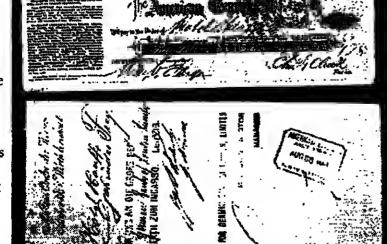

Turgo cashed the cheque on the fifth of August, a wet and blustery Wednesday, at the Hotel Hauffe in Leipzig. On the same day, an Englishman named Wells came to the

Reagan's Welcome Start

At long last, President Reagan has made a sound and shrewd foreign policy speech. Its primary purpose, of course, was not the catchy proposal to clear Europe of nuclear weapons, but rather to brace the West's faith in nuclear deterrence.

One speech will not achieve that goal. But in the short life of the Reagan administration to date, this speech stands out as a sober appreciation of international realities. Reagan recognized the need to show himself a humane and responsible custodian of frightening power, not some missile-riding cowboy. The president emphasized America's finest values without implying, as so often before, that they preclude rational agreement with the Soviet Union. And with due regard for the rising fears in Europe — and also in America — he effectively argued the case for arms and alliance.

"Our policies have resulted in the longest European peace in this century," he said. Why, then, endanger that peace by rashly uncoupling American power from Europe's de-fenses, or letting the momentum of Soviet weapons construction upset the Continent's balance of power? I hear you, Reagan assured the anti-bomb marchers. I arm to deter and to parley, not to fight.

As a measure of his resolve, the president offered something more than giving up medium-range missiles in Europe if the Russians dismantle theirs, which the Kremlin won't do very soon. He also offered — despite Afghanistan — to let the debate about weapons in Europe expand, as it must, into new negotiations about the full range of Soviet and American nuclear weapons. He vowed to champion liberty everywhere, as Moscow champions revolution, but he erased the impression that agreements to reduce the risks of nuclear war were mortgaged to con-

What the president did was to put the

et Union ought to study his message, flicts of interest in Ethiopia or El Salvador. So far, so good.

One morning's good reviews, bowever, will not assure long-run success for Reagan's new approach. The strains in the alliance are real. The Soviet campaign to exploit them is formidable. So are the difficulties of limiting and, as the president asks, really reducing nuclear arms.

It is far from clear that this good speech marks the end of Reagan's facile hope to use the threat of a costly arms race to force Moscow from the modest deals of SALT into the grand compact he calls START. The American economy won't support that threat. Neither will the politics of Europe.

It is not yet clear that the Reagan administration is reconciled to nuclear parity with the Soviet Union. As the arguments over Reagan's proposed deal in Europe will soon show, real equality among such diverse weap-ons is extremely difficult to define. Nothing will be achieved, however, if Americans aim for nuclear advantages to offset felt deficiencies in conventional arms. Neither an arms race nor negotiation can recapture strategic 'superiority.'

And Reagan has yet to prove that he can balance diplomacy with the Russians and hostility toward their system. The promised new ideas for "open" and "creative" verification of arms control, for example, can easily be turned into proposals that a closed Soviet society would find alarmingly intrusive. American experience in the nuclear age has shown that only a president who vigorously pursues accord with Moscow stands a chance of prevailing over the reluctance of his own

Democratic Issues and Prospects in El Salvador processes are going forward in Honduras, Guatemala, El Salvador and Costa Rica, "If Honduras can have a democratic Rica,"

NEW YORK — Liberal conventional wisdom in the United States is that El Salvador is a quagmire in which the Reagan administration already has the United States ankle-deep. The civil war is thought to be the inevitable, even desirable consequence of historic cruelty and injustice by the ruling oligarchy.

Communists may be leading the armed insurgency and receiving aid from Commu-nist countries, but that is considered beside the point. President José Napoleón Duarte is dismissed as a figurehead.

It is also accepted liberal wisdom that the United States should take the advice of Mexico, a country much closer to the struggie than the United States, and push for a negotiated settlement between right and left. If that does not work, if it comes down to a choice between the lertists and the government, then again Americans should proba-bly take the advice of Mexico, France and the Socialist International, and root for the left. One may not like the outcome, but it beats repeating Vietnam.

Venezuelan Vantage

Yet there are democracies in Latin America that support not only the government of El Salvador but also the Reagan administration's policy there.

Foremost among these is Venezuela, whose president, Luis Herrera Campins, used an address at the United Nations to denounce "some democratic countries" (France and Mexico) for "attempting to im-(France and Messeo) for "attempting to impart an undeserved respectability to groups devoted to terrorism, and play the game of those who present as moral equals the side making efforts to offer a political opening through elections ... and the side of those undertaking to prevent such a process. Venezuelan democrats, led by Betancourt, had to overthrow military dictatorships to gain power, and then defeat Castroite insurgents and rightist hit squads to keep it. It is instructive to interview former Communist gnerillas now serving in Venezuela's Con-gress on the reasons why they were defeated. First, they say. Betancourt focused mili-tary activity against them, sparing the population and preventing it from becoming radicalized. Next, he instituted land and other economic reforms which denied them a social base in the population. And finally, Betancourt remained firmly committed to democracy — and convinced the Venezuelan forthright compared with that of Mexico. Caracas opposes dictatorships of both the right and left, and favors overcoming insurgents by a two-pronged policy of military action and social change.

One of Venezuela's top foreign policy experts said in an interview: "El Salvador is a key example for all of Central America. A political solution there will stop the radical streams of both right and left elsewhere. At this moment, cooperation between the army and the democratic forces there shows poss bilities. If civilians and the military can work toward a democratic solution and social change, that is the best means for political stability and for defeating the guerrillas militarily and politically."

Another major factor, the official said, is the role of Nicaragua, which is progressively throttling opposition groups and building up a 50,000-man army—the biggest in Central America. "This is contrary to all the deepest economic interests of Nicaragua's people, and the equipment Nicaragua is get-ing is not for defense, but offense. We are convinced that since Nicaragua is aligned with Vietnam, Cuba and the Soviet Umon.

'The Only Way'

According to both Venezuelan and U.S. According to both Venezuelan and U.S. officials, documented cases of official violence have been cut substantially this year in El Salvador, and land reform is going forward despite attacks from both right and left. But does Duarte control the military? A Venezuelan official said, "Rather than talk about who controls whom, what you can see is increasing cooperation between the civilians and the military. They are much more integrated toward a common goal. They know that a military victory is not going to know that a military victory is not going to be easy without political reform, and the civilians know it's impossible to get a victory without the military. Duarte has much more prestige in the military than he did before." Among Venezuelan officials, José Napo-león Duarte is a democratic hero, a kind of junior Rómulo Betancourt. They even point to similar wounds that the two suffered in the name of democracy — Betancourt, severely burned on the face and hands by a car bomb planted on orders from rightist dictator Rafael Trujillo of the Dominican Republic, and Duarte, tortured and beaten by the military, losing parts of his fingers and having his face smashed by a rifte butt.

The Saudis, Camp David and Peace

By Philip M. Klutznik

The writer was secretary of commerce in the Carter administration and is president emeritus of the World Jewish Congress and honorary president of B'nai B'rith International. He wrote this article for The Washington Post.

WASHINGTON — Not since Israel's creation in 1948, in my judgment, has there been a greater possibility of achieving peace between Israel, the Palestinians and Israel's Arab neighbors.

Looking back, anyone who expected the Camp David accords to be accepted by all the states in the Middle East was unaware of the sensitivities that were either ignored or shelved for later consideration. Likewise, anyone who now expects the Sandis' eight points to be universally applauded is remiss in not appreciating the real facts of life in the region — both in Israel and among parties less thoughtful than the Saudis.

However, the acceptance by Jordan, the PLO and others of the overall approach embodied in the Saudi eight-point "peace plan" may be a crucial turning point. For the first time, even if indirectly, important Arab parties have turned away from "outlawing" Israci as an illegitimate entity and have looked to negotiations with recognition and "coexistence" as the eventual goal.

Many have forgotten the extreme differences between the speeches Anwar Sadat and Menachem Begin made to the Knesset differences that thoughtful negotiations helped resolve.

I feel somewhat the same about the carrent situation. The Sandis have taken a sig-nificant lead and will be attempting at the Arab summit in Fez later this month to achieve an Arab consensus. The importance of these developments must not be missed.

My visit in August to a number of Arab countries, including Saudi Arabia, convinced me that with very few exceptions there was a general feeling at the highest levels that Isra-el was here to stay, that it had developed into a military superpower, that Jewish nationalism was accepted as fact, if not understood, and that the time had finally come to find an answer to the basic problem that stood in the way of a comprehensive peace.

Over and over, the Palestinian issue dominated conversation and viewpoints. The Palestinians have become a special people in the Arab world, in some ways like the Jews were in the West after World War II.

The next most significant conclusion was that the PLO was the only party qualified to speak for the Palestinians. There will be those who will say that such a conclusion is naive or ill-founded. Perhaps so; but it remains a fact that the PLO has sufficient strength in an increasing number of capitals to either accelerate or abort the peace pro-cess that started with Sadat's Jerusalem visit.

The PLO members are trying to create, and with some success, an organization that handles many social and economic problems, even as they continue to build a more sophisticated military potential. They are spoken of as "the modern-day Jews of the

I found that the Camp David accords were rejected not so much because of unwilling-ness to contemplate peace with Israel as because they failed to link properly the Egyptian-Israeli treaty with resolution of the Palestinian issue. Many condemn Camp David for this, forgetting that without this begin-ning there probably would not be today's Saudi initiative. Others feel that Camp David has served its function and should now be supplemented or transcended.

It would be tragic to lose the momentum begun at Camp David. The autonomy dis-cussions should now be accelerated in an attempt to draw Palestinian representation into the negotiations. But if the antonomy talks fail to deal adequately with the Pales-tinian issue, there is no dishonor in supplementing them with the suggestions of others.

Here the Saudi approach may prove useful As President Hosni Mubarak in Egypt has suggested, and as the Reagan adminis-tration has implied, the Saudi ideas are not incompatible with the peace process. Enlarg-ing participation in the process was, in fact, envisioned at Camp David.

knew the representatives of Saudi Arabia the United Nations in the mid-1950s and 1960s. They were in the main mercenaries who were not always native Saudis or pol-ished diplomats. Energy economics and 20 years have transformed the Sandi situation. Yet the ruling family, it appears, senses that many more changes need to be made.

In my contacts outside the kingdom with ntatives of the Saudi monarchy and with Saudi private businessmen, I have not found the alleged arrogance of which some others complain. There actually seems to be a kind of modesty, accompanied by serious anxiety about the unknown future.

Comparing Sandi Arabia with Iran under the shah is unrealistic. In fact, there is little comparison to Saudi Arabia today or probably in history. The country is sui generis.

I conclude that no genuine peace will be achieved any time soon without some real measure of Saudi participation. If this conclusion is correct, or even if the conjecture has possibilities, then it should be explored by both the United States and Israel. We need to build on the progress Camp David made possible. We may be midstream be-tween the beginning of a limited peace and the achievement of a comprehensive peace.

Lessons From Britain

Now It's Up to Europe

Britain's condition ought to be a matter of concern to the theorists of the American left, if there still is an American left. Currently, the analogy between the United States and Britain is mainly fueling quarrels in the Reagan administration over economic policy. But the analogy is not a close one. The British economy is very different from America's; because of the nationalized industries steel, autos, coal, power and the rest - the British public sector is much larger. That is the question that British experience presents to the strategists of the left. How does a democratic government conduct economic policy in a country with large government-owned companies and a militant labor tradition?

Until recently, most people supposed that government ownership at least made it easier to maintain public control over prices and wages. Whatever the losses in efficiency, the argument went, nationalization made an incomes policy manageable. But that's the surprise of the past decade - Britain's enormous inflation rate.

The persistence of rapid inflation in the midst of a profound recession is often cited as proof of the failure of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's monetarist policy. It might better be cited as proof of the intractability of the nationalized industries. In those industries, a strike is not an economic weapon against one company but a political challenge to the government. Even the Thatcher government has been able to withstand only a limited amount of that sort of thing. The result has been poor control over wages in the companies where the government theoretically has the best control.

Mrs. Thatcher's struggle against inflation has been fairly successful in the private sector. It is the public sector that is doing her in. To get the public deficit down, she has repeatedly had to let the government's companies raise prices. Prices in the public sector have been rising several times as fast as in private business.

Radical politics very often leads to conservative economics - conservative in the sense of resisting change. Most people are conservative about the ways in which they earn their livings. Faced with a plant closure, nobody is much consoled by the thought that it's the price of growth, and that some other plant with higher productivity and better wages will spring up somewhere else. But there is a heavy cost exacted by preserving jobs in uncompetitive and obsolescent factories. Not all the examples are British. These are choices that Americans are going to have to make if the current tremendous losses continue in America's automobile industry.

A Strange Silence After the Submarine Caper

PARIS — Scandinavia was ap-palled by the nuclear weap-ons-bearing Soviet submarine that poked into Sweden. But the inci-That much debated symbol of dent has been treated with peculiar insonciance by the rest of the West, as though it were enough to giggle at the Russians slipping on ien own banana peel.
Inquiries at NATO, at the U.S.

Atlantic fleet headquarters in Norfolk, Va., and at the Pentagon failed to produce any assessment of the military implications. In fact, officials made it sound as though the whole thing were being brushed aside as too politically embarrassing to look into, al-though the Navy is fascinated by the military questions raised.

Spying

President Reagan and top Cabinet members speak freely about the abstract absurdities of grand nuclear strategy. But concrete and menacing incidents that should be taken up seem to pass beneath attention. Now Moscow is pretending that the whole affair is American embroidery on an innocent accident. It almost blames Sweden for not getting its islands and na-val base out of the way when a Soviet sub passes by.

Swedish authorities explain the sub's ability to penetrate so far into their hazardous territorial waters without detection as a vagary of peace. The area is rocky and shallow, and the surprise wasn't that the craft ran aground outside a major naval base but that it got so far before it was stuck.

In peacetime, Sweden relies on sighting intruders because any sub navigating in that area is obliged to surface. The peculiarities of the Baltic, with unpredictable changes in water temperature and salinity, make a reliable detection system prohibitively expensive, the

By Flora Lewis Swedes say. However, they insist that in an alert or in wartime the sub would have been blown up by tivated. That is scarcely reassuring. Nobody knows exactly what the sub was trying to do, but it was obviously spying. A few days be-fore, the Swedish Navy had been conducting anti-submarine warfare tests in the area, and the Swedes have some particularly advanced mine fields that are normally ina

So it is assumed that the sub was snooping around to monitor the tests. But it also was probably charting the channels, reconnoiter-ing for future missions. Possibly, Swedish authorities said, it was dropping its own buoys on the bottom to guide later incursions, although none have vet been found.

Discovery that it carried nuclear weapons, presumably torpedoes and possibly mines, came as an shock. The Russians haven't mitted that, and a Russian professor visiting Oslo even had the gall to claim that radiation indicating 22 pounds of U-238 detected ernment realized that the only way by the Swedes was just from their own wristwatches. Tass reported that howler deadpan.

This sub had no missile-launch ing hatches. But its nuclear torpedoes could be used either against large ships, such as aircraft carriers, or to block a major harbor entrance permanently.

Everywhere

NATO's stand - that Sweden is neutral, so this Soviet activity is not an alliance concern - is astonishing. There is not the slightest reason to think that what this sub could have done to the Swedish naval base couldn't as well have been done to any port.

Especially ominous was the Russian statement on the sub's arms. Moscow said "it carried weapons and ammunition standard for all Soviet naval vessels." That, to Swedish anthorities, means it must be assumed that all of the Soviet Navy is nuclear-equipped.

The Swedes didn't see nuclear torpedoes. Officials said the gov-

Swedish officers could get into the torpedo room was by force. Stock-holm decided not to escalate the incident, but it is convinced nuclear weapons were on board. Russian proposals for a Nordic nuclear-free zone are mmasked with the revelation that all these ships, which often play hide-and-seek in fjords and channels, carry nuclear weapons. Greece wants to negotiate removal of nuclear weapons stored on U.S. bases and hopes for a Balkan nuclear-free zone. It should remember what must now be understood to be on Soviet ships in the Mediterranean. It is easy to imagine what kind of global outrage would have crupted if this sub had been American. It is hard to understand why the military and political implica-tions of the inadvertent discovery are being treated in the United States and Europe as little more than a satisfying Soviet pratfall.

Nuclear weapons are in practi-cally everybody's neighborhood now. It's time to talk scriously to Moscow about all of this. 01981, The New York Times.

1906: U.S. Labor Shortage

NEW YORK - Prosperity at the top notch has caused such a labor famine throughout the United States as was never before known. Employers from the Atlantic to the Pacific are demanding workers who cannot be supplied. New York City feels the labor dearth severely. Employment agencies report they cannot find half help enough for their patrons, and scores of retail establishments, unable to get boys for delivery service, hire men at men's wages. English-speaking boys and men can hardly be obtained by the hotels at any price. Even immigrants ask large pay for inferior service. Reports from the West say that great railroad improvements are halted by the lack of men for their construction.

MUKDEN, China - Gen. Honjo, commander of the Japanese Army in Manchuria, in an interview with the United Press, insisted that Soviet Russia furnished arms and trained men to the Chinese general Ma Chang-shan. In his headquarters facing Mukden's plaza, overlooking the wide payed boulevards and solid buildings that symbolize the permanency of Japan's position in Manchuria, he said: "I am satisfied that Gen. Ma received arms, ammunition and trained men from Russia, but that the Soviets took no positive action in the recent engagement." Seated in a deep armchair and sipping tea from a lacquered cup, he added: "Japan wants peace in Manchuria and believes it is not too far distant."

DARIS — The most gripping thing about "La Tragedie de Carmen," Peter Brook's highly concentrated adaptation of "Carmen" at the Bouffes du Nord, is that the acting is so good that the spectator almost forgets that it is being done by singers.

It shows that the deed can be done, although it probably is not transferable to the standard opera house, where the physical effort of filling a big house with voice claims a higher priority. In Brook's smaller, stripped-down, highly re-sonant Bouffes du Nord, and with the audience only a few feet away, the singers could give intimate, chamber-opera performances. Don José actually could, and did, end his flower song pianissimo and be concentrates on the drama of Car- innkeeper Lillas Pastia has an imbked that.

THE PARIS STAGE

What he would have thought of the rest of the proceedings is more speculative, for considerable liberties have been taken by Brook and his co-adapters, Jean-Claude Carrière and the composer Marius Constant, who also conducted the opening performance Tuesday. What they have done is taken the raw material of "Carmen" - Meriméc's terse, hard-bitten tale, Meilhac and Halevy's libretto, and Dizet's music — and produced something entirely different.

There are only four sung parts and three spoken ones. There is no chorus - gone the cigarette girls, gypsy smugglers, bullfight fans, soldiers and children. The action beard by everyone. It's probably men and José and it is laid out portant role, Garcia (Carmen's safe to say that Bizet would have with brutal speed, an bour and a gypsy husband) is restored so he half without intermission.

The music gets similar treatment. The orchestra is reduced to 14 instruments, one representative of each instrumental group in the standard orchestra and tucked away in a back corner of the playing area. Besides this reduction. there are other kinds of musical dislocation, such as thet achieved by accompanying the "Habanera" with impani alone. The production opens with a theme from the card scene on solo violin, and that fateful music comes back frequently in different forms and again at the end. Yet all the familiar arias and duets are on hand and more or less in place, although often given startling dramatic twists.

This adaptation goes back to Merimée in some details — the can be killed by José, and Carmen breaks a plate and uses the pieces as castanets for her dance. But Merimée's most important contribution is the atmosphere, which dispenses with operatic cuphe-mism. Carmen is lascivious, promiscuous and callous. José is not only known to be a hothead and a killer, he is seen to be. This "Carmen" is about sex and violence; the violence is convincing and the erotic byplay explicit and amusing.

Micsela Relained

Yet Meilhac and Halevy are not thrown out. Micaela was their invention and she is here with her music substantially intact. But while Bizer's librettists invented her for reasons of operatic convention, Brook reinvents her. She is not only a surrogate for the staid village society José comes from, but the direct rival of Carmen. The two clash physically when Carmen seduces José from under Micaela's nose, and Carmen carves a cross on Micaela's forehead - making her the victim of the crime for which Carmen is arrested, and which in the opera takes place out of sight and with an anonymous victim. Escamillo the torero is here too instead of Merimée's mere picador, although he suffers the lat-ter's fate of being trampled to death by a bull.

The action opens on the bare dirt stage with what seems to be an old beggar hidden under a blanket, playing with the occult parapher-nalia of fortune-telling. She tries to band a card to Jose, who is not much interested, and he seems even less interested in the arrival of Micaela with news from mother. No sooner has the duet begun than the begger flings back her blanket; it is Carmen, and the steamy action is on.

There are some clever transitions. Escamillo's knife fight with José takes place in Lillas Pastia's instead of in the mountains, the equivalent of jumping from the middle of the opera's Act 2 to the end of Act 3 — neat and convinc-ing, and little is lost but folklore.

The harsh atmosphere is visually reinforced by the spareness of sets and costumes, the dirt floor and even the derelict shabbiness of the theater itself. Indeed, there are no real sets, merely objects carried on to suggest place. A big rug does for the tavern. Chloé Obolensky's costumes are plain, and José and Zuniga do not seem to worry much about military elegance. Escamil-lo's glitzy last-act hullfighter's suit must have taken 90 percent of the Brook has cast this "Carmen' with young relatively unknown singers — three each in rotation for Carmen and Jose, two each for Micaela and Escamillo. The opening cast was musically secure (most of the time they could not see the conductor, vocally impressive and dramatically everything that Brook must have asked. They were Helene Delavault as Carmen Laurence Dale as José, Vèronique Dietschy as Micaela and Carl Johan Falkman as Escamillo. Dale, whose flower song (aria does not seem the right word here) was managed with beautiful restraint, seemed physically a bit slight for Jose — he did not really look a safe bet to walk away from a knife battle with Alain Maratrat's menacing Garcia.

But that is a quibble in an impressive achievement. Brook and company have one big advantage besides their own brilliance and the evident care and affection with which they have dared radical surgery on an authentic masterpiece. That is Bizer's music, which is utterly indestructible, as any number of reorchestrations have already proven. Here the music somehow eems just as applicable to Merimée as it does to opéra comique.

Incidentally, the Paris Opera was co-producer with Brook's organization, thus purging itself of sin for the inflated, lead-footed, cliché-ridden production of the real "Carmen" at the Palais des Sports.

NEW YORK — Alan Flusser wears heart-shaped culf links, hand-knit socks, striped English suspenders, Brooks Brothers button-down shirts, alligator tassel loafers and never, but never, goes without a yellow flower in his buttonhole. A dandy, right, a man unabashedly in love with clothes -and he has made it pay.

"I've had my own clothes made at tailors, shoemakers, tiemakers and whatever makers," he said. "since I was 17 years old — and I am now 36."

Today, after six years with Pierre Cardin's menswear division in New York, Plusser is on his own. In two years he has built a $2-million menswear business on 57d Street

Coping With Trends

He also recently wrote a book called "Making the Man: The Insider's Guide to Buying and Wearing Men's Clothes" (Simon and Schuster), which, as flamboyant fashion lingo goes, is as bland as they come. But the slightly fuddyduddy title, backed by knowledge-able (if somewhat leaden) information, should go right to most men's hearts: It helps them cope with the frenzy of fast-passing trends.

"The past two decades," Finsser says, "have been a period of high energy in the menswear industry. Menswear became designer-oriented and men's fashions changed too fast in too short a time. Designers creating 'new looks' entered the field in force, producing strikingly different collections each season, just as they and others have done for years in the women's field.

"A once-staid industry about which George Frazier, America's ereatest men's clothing critic (and former columnist for Esquire) could write There is always so little change,' suddenly became a marketplace for new ideas. "For many men, shopping for clothes used to be a time of great. fun and excitement," Flusser added. "Recently, because of the moncy they have thrown away and are sure they will throw away again, it has become something of a chore." And an expensive one. But the book is trying to remedy that.

Guidelines

Dedicated to his father, "a realestate broker and a man so elegant he would go down to Manhattan just for a manicure," the book breaks down into two parts. The first is a series of guidelines, teaching a man how to find quality and lasting style in the clothes he buys The second is a world directory of shops where a man can be sure of finding clothes of style and value —which, Flusser hastens to add, is not exhaustive. In it. Flusser lists Ace, in London, as the "hottest" store in the world.

The first part of the book is dead serious and, as Flusser points out, is illustrated by an architect, not a fashion illustrator. It's very specific: how to tie a tie, how to buy a pair of shoes. Parts of it, including the section on shoes, were excerpted in the Gentleman's

So what's so special about buying a pair of shoes?

Flusser starts by quoting George
Frazier, who would often remark. "Wanna know if a guy is well-dressed? Look down." He goes on to discuss the merits of English vs. Italian shoes. The English tend to be heavy and cloddy, while the Italian are lightweight and elegant. However, Flusser is in favor of the English ones because, he writes:

Noting that Americans have al-ways had a strong color scase, "because their bodies are large compared to Europeans, and they carry reds, greens, deep yellows and blues without reflecting upon their masculinity," Flusser claims that the last time American men dressed as Americans was in the late 1950s. "After that period of time, we really looked to Europe for fashion directions. It's only now, in the beginning of the 1980s, that we've returned to our own point of view about men's clothes partly because Europe has become so expensive to import."

Besides his father, Flusser most imires the Duke of Windsor and Fred Astaire (and frequents Anderson and Sheppard their Savile Row tailor). That is why it is reassuring to know he is not totally jaded and can come up with such remarks as "The original Levi's jean is a true classic and hard to improve upon." After all, how many men can afford $34 handknit socks?

Power has always had its risks. Ever since the earliest civilisations, mankind has sought out and continually developed ever improving methods of personal protection. However, as new technologies developed offering refinements and better options, equally so, the new technologies threw up the discovery and understanding of new and greater risks. At DSM, one of Europe's leading chemicals and plastics groups, one of our latest contributions to protection is in the seemingly prosaic area of safer crash helmets for motor cyclists.

energy based plastics are vulnerable to energy based fuels. Most motor cyclists usually fill their own fuel tanks. Hands get contaminated. Hands touch crash helmets. Petrol weakens plastic crash helmets. At DSM, as you might expect, safety and high technology go hand in hand. When it was discovered that petrol was weakening the chemical structures of crash helmets, our researchers found a way to overcome the problem. We didn't set out to provide the world with safer crash helmets – only better and safer plastics. At DSM safety comes before power.

Mitsui Expects Unchanged Annual Results

TOKYO — Mitsui, reporting a 14.5 percent drop in first-half profit, said Thursday it expects to report an after-tax profit for the current business year, which ends next March 31, approximately the same as last year's 11.2 billion yen ($50 million) on sales of about 13.1 trillion yen. Sales last year were 12.67 trillion yen.

The company said exports may fall in the second half because of the yen's recovery against the U.S. dollar, but domestic sales will improve following the smooth progress of inventory adjustment.

Nestlé Sees Possible Record Year

VEVEY, Switzerland — Nestlé's group net profit for 1981 will be considerably greater than the 683 million Swiss francs ($382 million) reported in 1980 and could reach the record 872 million francs of 1976, chairman Pierre Liotard-Vogt said Thursday.

Group turnover in the first 10 months of 1981 rose to 23.5 billion francs from 19.6 billion in the same period last year, be told a press Turnover growth, which was 19.9 percent in the first 10 months, is unlikely to be as great for the year as a whole because of the effects of an appreciating Swiss franc, he said. He said business was helped by the strength of the U.S. dollar earlier in the year.

ICL Says Latest Job Cuts Should Be the Last

LONDON - ICL's plans to cut another 1,500 jobs in its British operations and an unspecified number overseas should be its last major manpower reduction, Robert Wilmot, managing director, said Thursday.

The latest job cuts will bring to more than 9,000 the number of jobs shed by the company over the past year. ICL now employs about 25,000 persons. Mr. Wilmot said the oumber of jobs cut overseas will reflect the level of business in each country. Ford Seeks Concessions at Ohio Plant

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Hourly workers at Ford's Brook Park plant complex near Cleveland have joined the list of union employees being asked to

Poland Facing Tough Questions

Banks Demand All the Facts on Country's Economy

By Seth Lipsky AP-Day Jones

NEW YORK - The 460 international commercial banks

NEWS ANALYSIS who hold an estimated $17 billion in Polish debt are quietly starting to ask a lot of overdue questions in a tone that suggests they expect more than just a little say in running Poland for the foreseeable future. The banks' questions for the Poles are in a document titled "Economic Information Requests."

Though the answers are only now starting to filter back to the lenders, the questions themselves de-serve ottention. The banks are demanding to know everything from the contents of Poland's once-secret bank accounts in Soviet rubles to the details of what Polish planners are predicting for household incomes. The questions not only show that the bankers believe Poland's domestic economy is related to its obility, or inability, to make good on its foreign debt, but also underscore the ignorance in which some banks were operating in Poland, despite the buge sums of money at stake and the enormous potential for political complications.

Stabilization Program

The information request says a debt restructuring "requires the preparation, adoption and im-plementation by the Polish authorities of a com-prehensive stabilization program, as well as provi-sions for the creditors' monitoring of Polish economic policies and performance as related to the country's ability to service debt." Their aim in all this, the bankers insist, "is not to impose econom-

One thing the bankers want — an "indispensa-ble prerequisite," they call it — is an English and Polish language text of Poland's stabilization program that was passed last summer by Poland's parlia-

The bankers' memo says Poland has been providing considerable information on its economy, but complains that data "in many instances haven't been reported on a timely and regular basis and some publications haven't been available in adequate quantity." Underlying assumptions and projec-tions "haven't been made clear," the bankers say, adding existing data and analyses in many cases have not been made generally available.

The bankers break their information request into five categories:

 The economic stabilization program • The external financial situation. The lenders are demanding more detailed information than they have been provided. They want Poland, in reporting on its bank accounts, to distinguish among "non-socialist convertible accounts," accounts convertible in the Council for Mutual Ecooomic Assistance (or Comecon, a Soviet-backed economic alliance), "transferable ruble accounts" and clearing accounts. The banks want to know the structure of Po-land's external debt and international reserve holdings and they want Poland to say what it expects will be the sources of projected new credits.

• Production and materials allocation. The bankers want monthly data for domestic production, cominal values by branches of industry and physical production for important commodities. They want Poland to "distinguish between projected capacity and projected capacity utilization and to provide historical figures.

Agriculture. The bankers want estimates for the 1981 harvest and projections for livestock and animal products through 1982. They want data (Continued on Page 11, Col.1)

Marathon Accepts Merger Bid Of $7.5 Billion by U.S. Steel

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK - Marathon Oil

Co. said Thursday that its board of directors had accepted an offer from U.S. Steel Corp. to buy the Ohio-based oil concern.

The U.S. Steel offer, valued at up to $7.5 billion depending on whether U.S. Steel exercises certain options, counters an earlier $5.1-billion takeover bid for Marathon by Mobil. Marathon officials have strongly opposed a Mobid teleover, saying it would "radically restructure" competi-tion in the U.S. oil business.

U.S. Steel and Marathon jointly announced that, beginning Thurs-day, the largest U.S. steelmaker would seek to buy 30 million shares of Marathon common stock, or about 51 percent of the outstanding stock, for $125 a share, or a total of $3.75 billion. The offer is scheduled to expire

Marathon and U.S. Steel said the remaining 49 percent of Marathon's shares will then be exchanged for $100 a share of 12year 121/2-percent senior U.S. Steel Marathon has also agreed to give the U.S. Steel subsidary an option to buy for $2.8 billion Marathoo's oil and gas properties in the Yates field in Texas if control of Marathon passes to another company. Marathon also agreed to give U.S. Steel an option to buy 10 million unissued shares at $90

Mobil, the second largest U.S. oil company, has offered to buy ont Marathon shareholders in a two-stage cash and stock deal including a bid of $85-a-share cash for up to 40 million shares of stock, or 68 percent of Marathon's outstanding common stock.
Marathon is the 17th largest U.S.

oil company.

After the Marathon-U.S. Steel announcement, the two companies were the volume leaders on the New York Stock Exchange with more than a million shares traded in both issues. Marathon soared 274 to 1044 while U.S. Steel dropped 21/4 to 28.

Mobil's president, William Taroulareas, would not comment on the U.S. Steel bid, But he told the U.S. District court in Cleve-On the American Exchange, land on Mobil's proposed Marathon acquisition that he feels Marathon's stock is actually worth $40 a share.

In Washington, Assistant Attoroey General William Baxter said

Steel's offer for Marathon to the Federal Trade Commission. Later, Marathon announced at its Findloy, Ohio, headquarters that a well in the Brae field of the U.K. sector of the North Sea has flowed 3,698 barrels of oil a day and 3.8 million cubic feet of natural gas. But it added that three other zones in the 8,700-foot well produced only water.

A Marathon-U.S. Steel merger would be the second-largest in U.S. history, ranking behind the recently completed Connoco-Du-Poot merger with the merged company having combined sales of $20.67 billion based on 1980 fig-

U.S. GNP Revised Up; Corporate Profits Rose

WASHINGTON — Both the U.S. economy, as measured by the revised gross national product, and U.S. corporate profit grew in the third quarter of the year, according to figures released Thursday by the Commerce Department. But economists were unwilling to alter their judgment that a recession is under

The department revised its earli-er estimate of U.S. GNP to show growth of 0.6 percent in the quarter, rather than the decline of that amount shown in its preliminary

Before-tax profit increased 0.8 percent to an annual rate of $230.9 billion, while after-tax profit rose to a rate of $153.5 billion. Of the GNP revision, the de-

Moody's Downgrades GM's Credit Rating

NEW YORK - Moody's Investors Service said its lowering of the credit rating of General Motors, long the symbol of America's in-dustrial strength, was taken in view of GM's long-term outlook, and not on the basis of recent loss-

On Wednesday, Moody's downgraded GM's bonds to double-A, the second-highest level, from

Thomas J. McGuire, executive vice president for Moody's corporate department, said, "We focused on the change in the com-petitive advantage of American automobile companies versus foreign automakers, mainly in Japan."

Higher Costs U.S. aotomobile manufacturers operate at a significantly higher cost differential than the Japanese, "and we don't see that being re-duced in the short term," he said.

Moody's action applies to the General Motors Acceptance Corp., GM's financial subsidiary, as well as to the parent company, and could make it more expensive for General Motors to borrow money because interest rates for longterm loans are closely tied to o corporation's rating.

Mr. McGuire ooted that the downgrading applies only to GM's long-term obligations, and oot to its short-term borrowings. Moody's rating on General Motors' short-term commercial paper, for example, remains unchanged at Prime-1, the highest possible.

A GM spokesman attributed the

France, Soviet Union Agree on Price of Gas

PARIS - France and the Soviet Union have reached agreement in principle on the basic price for the importation of Siberian natural gas beginning in 1984, officials of the state-owned Gaz de France

Although they declined to be more specific on the actual price, they acknowledged that the Rus-sians retreated from their original demand for a floor price of $6.05 per million British thermal units for the duration of the contract. Sources said that the agreement involves a price of about $5.70 per million BTU for gas delivered at the Czech-Austrian border.

However, he added, GM would not change its plans to to spend $40 billion on its new model cars and production facilities.

[GM said Thursday that the intermediate and long-term borrowings for the company and its GMAC unit are expected to he about $5.5 billion in 1982, with almost all of the borrowing being done by GMAC, Reuters reported

A factor that affected Moody's decision, Mr. McGuire said, was that between 1976 and 1980 GM's total debt, including that of GMAC, increased to 65 percent of its capital base, from 53 percent.

General Motors was the last of the three largest U.S. automakers to have their credit ratings lowered by Moody's. Ford Motor Co. has been lowered to an A-rating the third highest. Chrysler's rating has been downgraded to Caa, which Mr. McGuire described as a "spec-$190 million in the first.

Union Angered by GM Bid For Lowered Expectations

tomobile Workers union has reacted angrily to o campaign by Gen-eral Motors, made public earlier this week, that is aimed of convincing GM's workers to "reduce or eliminate unrealistic expectations about economic gains" in the 1982 contract negotiations. The campaign, in which all of GM's 499,000 hourly and salaried workers are to attend classes to receive information on what the company calls its impaired finan-cial situation, also hopes to con-vince employees that the company's survival is at stake. Owen Bieber, UAW vice president and director of its GM de-partment, said Wednesday that GM was attempting to "generate distrust of the UAW leadership" and to "shift the major portion of its efforts to reduce costs into the work place" and to "spoon-feed" its views to "o captive audience." Mr. Rieber was particularly critical of a GM suggestion that its quality of work life programs be used as a means to carry its views to the company's workers. He said this was o "perversion" of the worker participation program, which he said was intended to be a "vehicle for mutual inplant cooperation." It was not, he httle attention the recent fall in interest rates because their drop has been based on the deepening recession and not o reduction in inflaon Wednesday, the Federal Reserve Board moved to make credit cheaper and easier. Analysts said the Fed move - an injection of funds into the banking system that banks can then use to make loans - may foreshadow more declines in the prime lending rate and probably in the Fed's own discount rate, which is the interest the central bank charges member banks who borrow from it. But later, some analysts began to describe the operation as a technical move and not a sign that the Fed wanted to make reserves sig-nificantly more available. Federal Reserve officials have said privately that they are willing to see interest rates come down farther.

The falling U.S. interest rates pushed the dollar down on foreign exchange markets and gave a fur-ther boost to the rapidly strength-ening Japanese yeu. The price of gold also slipped.

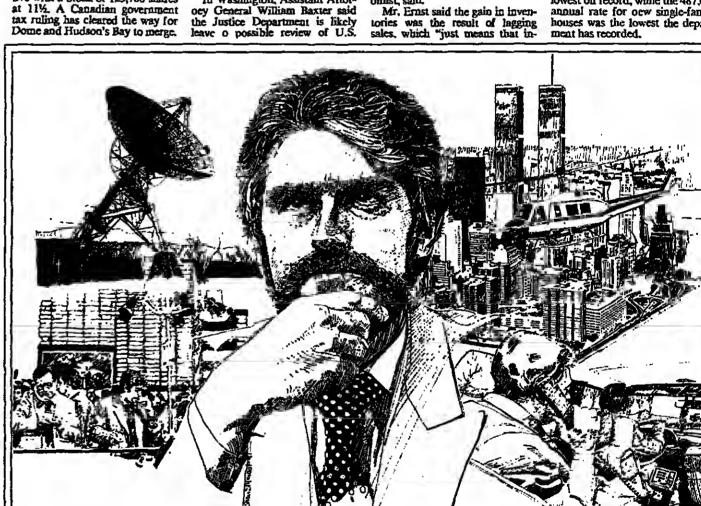

In London, the dollar fell to 219.10 yen in early trading, its lowest level against the Japanese cur-rency for five months, before rally-ing later. The yen was trading at around 234 to the dollar just three weeks ago but dealers have report-ed large switches by Middle East countries from the dollar to the

On the trading floor, the big news centered on U.S. Steel's bid for Marathon. Sedeo, which owns 7.7 percent of Marathon's stock, was higher after an opening block of 235,100 shares at 37.

The man with exceptional goals needs an exceptional bank.

What makes Trade Development Bank exceptional? To start with, there is our policy of concentrating oo things we do unusually well. For example, trade and export financing, foreign exchange and banknotes, money market transactions and precious metals.

Geographically, too, we work mainly in areas where we have something special to offer. This includes the U.S.A., where our subsidiary, Republic National Bank of New York, is one of America's 30 largest banks. It also includes a oumber of less familiar countries, where our exceptional knowledge of local conditions can be an important advantage for clients.

What's more, we keep our backoffice systems running abreast of our business. You may not notice this directly, but it shows up in quicker decisions and fewer errors.

While we move fast in serving our clients, we're distinctly traditionalist in our basic policies. At the heart of our business is the maintenance of a strong and diversified deposit base. Our portfolio of assets is also welldiversified, and it is a point of principle with us to keep a conservative ratio of capital to deposits and a high degree of liquidity - sensible strategies in these uncertain times.

If TDB sounds like the sort of bank you would like to entrust with your business, get in touch with us. We're ready to serve you in most of the world's financial centers.

Japan Warns Of Impending 'Trade War'

By Takeshi Sato

TOKYO - Japan's fast growing current-account surplus is pushin the world to the verge of a trade war, Toshio Komoto, director-general of Japan's Economic Planning Agency, said Thursday.

Reflecting growing official con-cern in Japan over the country's foreign trade disputes, Mr. Komoto said, "Overseas discontent is rising so high that we are almost on the verge of a trade war."

Japan's top economic planner told a meeting of business leaders that discontent in the United States and Western Europe "has been causing a protectionist tend-ency that might deal a fatal blow to the world economy."

In unusually direct com for a scnior Japanese official, he said Japan cannot flatly reject U.S. requests for the abolition of import tariffs on such items as computers and car parts. "We have to respond to the request to some extent, although there are some items on which Japan cannot agree to remove import duties," he said. shortly before U.S. Treasury Secre-

By Robert Metz New York Times Service NEW YORK - Sliding prices for retail shares in the last several trading sessions may have put the group in a buying range once

The prevailing attitude has been that earnings growth will be slow-ing sharply for such leading companies as R.H. Macy, Federated Department Stores, Dayton-Hudson, and Allied Stores.

This would be disappointing in that Christmas is the most important season in retailing, but some analysts believe investors have overreacted to the prospects for

Charles Tlucek, a senior invest-ment officer for Chemical Bank who follows retail companies, said that retail shares at current prices discount a far worse season that the major retailers are likely to ex-

Therefore, the bank is beginning to focus on retail shares once again. Chemical bought retailing shares heavily between March, 1980, and May, 1981. The bank turned more cautious thereafter and has not added to positions in major retail companies since.

Meanwhile, Chemical bas bought shares of such specialty retailers as Rite Aid, Shaklee, Tandy and U.S. Shoe.

Speaking of the bank's attitude toward the major retailers, Mr. Tlucek said: "One reason we became cautious last May was befully discounted improvements in both gross margins and operating expense ratios that resulted out of stronger-than-expected sales.

"Retail shares, which commonly sell at discounts to the price-earnings ratio of the market generally, were already on a par with their historical relationships to the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index. In May, the S&P sold at about 9 times earnings."

Mr. Thuck said it was unusual for retailers to carry earnings mul-tiples that high on a sustained ba-sia. He added, "Since there was no room for earnings disappointment at the May share prices, we adopted a more cantious policy."

In the succeeding months, though, the multiples of major re-

The bankers conclude by noting that it is the creditors, not Poland, who will determine whether Warsaw has complied with the information requests.

However, it is by no means certain that Poland's answers will sat-isfy the bankers — or, for that matter, that Poland will answer in full. The other day, for example, Poland's army newspaper, Zolni-erz Wolnosci, attacked the Interna-tional Monetary Fund's practice of requiring detailed information from members as a form of

But for all the questions the bankers are asking Poland, no one seems to be asking the bankers: How are could so many Western bankers have managed to lend out $17 billion of their depositors' funds without having the answers to these questions to start with? Says a banker involved: "People look and say, 'How the hell did you do this?" He concludes, "I never have seen a good answer."

TRANSIT SERVICE.

How Honeywell helped get America's new commuter shuttle off the ground.

When Joe Engle and Richard Truly set the Columbia down at Edwards Air Force Base, they confirmed the opening of a new era of space travel. Repeated excursions into orbit with the same vehicle are now a reality. Checking the pulse.

To assist engineers in the Launch Control Center, a Honeywell Central Data system captures and stores the Columbia's operational data during checkout and launch. The two Honeywell computers in this system are capable of handling data flowing at a rate of 25,000 sample measurements per second.

These same computers also store the shuttle's nominal performance data. And, on demand, they display both the nominal data and the real-time operational data on consoles in the Launch Control Center, giving engineers there an instant readout on the comparative state of the Columbia's performance. Power steering.

Once the shuttle is airborne. other Honeywell systems take over. Our quadruple-redundant Flight Control System is the Columbia's automatic pilot. It controls and monitors the shuttle's flight, from lift-off to touch down. In either automatic or manual flight mode, the Flight Control System computes corrective control adjustments and signals the hydraulic systems for the shuttle's rudder, elevons, and other control elements.

The Columbia's Main Engine Controller, another Honeywell system, is the first control be an integral part of a rocket engine. Among other things, it measures 74 engine parameters and controls the amount of liquid hydrogen and oxygen flowing into the most efficient rocket engines ever built.

Today at Honeywell.

In addition to aerospace and computer technology, Honeywell scientists are currently involved in basic and applied research in such fields as solid state electronics, fiber optics, industrial productivity, laser instrumentation, energy manage-ment, and medical technology.

For more information on the space shuttle write us at Honeywell Europe, 14, Avenue Henri Matisse, 1140 Brussels, Belgium. Or call (32.2) 241.44.50.

JOSEPH CONRAD

By Roger Tennant. 276 pp. $16.95. Atheneum, Vreeland Avenue, Totoma, N.J. 07512.

Reviewed by Michiko Kakurani

FOR the biographer, Joseph Con-rad would seem the perfect sub-ject: unlike most writers who spend the better part of their lives sitting in a room, turning sentences around, he spent some 20 years gathering experience and adventures as a sailor and explorer of strange, exotic places. The "shadowy country" of "inextinguishable desires and fears" that shaped his fiction was not only a literary construct, but in many cases grew out of an actual landscape whose emotional and physical geography the author had explored himself.

Of course, the challenge of illuminating Conrad's peripatetic life in light of the imaginative richness of his fiction has already been met by several able scholars, and it is in light of al able scholars, and it is in light of these previous works that Roger Tennant's new biography, "Joseph Conrad," must be considered. A masterwork of exhaustive detail, Frederick Karl's voluminous "Joseph Conrad: The Three Lives," which appeared in 1979, created a subtle psychological portrait of a man isolated by his willful sense of marginality and is now ful sense of marginality and is now accepted by many as the standard life. A more critical approach was taken last year by Ian Watt, whose "Conradin the Nineteenth Century" situates the aothor's achievement within the modernist tradition.

Tennant's book is neither as ambitious as these works nor as compel-ling. Although he refers in passing to both his predecessors, he offers no new material, no further insights into Conrad's dark and anguished vision.
Rather, his stance is that of the diligent, even reverential, fan. "In the 1960s I published a 'Conradian' novel, now forgotten by the author as well as by the public," Tennant writes in the preface. "This was followed by a thesis on the relation of Conrad's art to his life, which I found so fascinating that I could not stop."

There is nothing wrong, certainly, with such amateur enthusiasm, and in some respects Tennant's account, rendered in clean, durable prose, serves as a pleasant introduction to Conrad's life and work. His childhood in Poland as the son of a radical aristocrat is used to prefigure his later isolation land, without humanity as long as Poland, our Mother, is enslaved, wrote his father in a letter - and his decision to run away to sea at the age of 17 is placed in context with his romantic imagination and his disappointments in love Copious though somewhat cursory, comparisons between actual events and Contad's fio tional renditions also indicate much research and a certain understanding of his art.

Of his art.

Unfortunately, such insights are rarely sustained. Bent on maintaining the brisk pace of his chronological narrative, Tennant speeds through Conrad's encounters and accomplishments, dropping names and dates and little more. Although we are told where and when — and often with what agony — Conrad composed a given novel, there is little critical assessment of the work. Having stated that he regards Conrad as the greatest writer in the English language."
Tennant summarizes a plot or two

A T FIRST it's hard to say just why "Peace Breaks Out" makes you feel uneasy. After all, there's really nothing wrong with it: In sentence after the sentence after t ter graceful sentence and page after scamless page, John Knowles builds a story as solid as the mahogany panel-ing of Devon, the prep school in his famous first novel, "A Separate Peace," to which he has returned after

ON the diagramed deal, many East-West pairs brought bome three no-trump contracts from the East side. This contract could have been beaten by an inspired beart lead, for if declarer ducks, as he must, North can shift to diamonds and South can revert to hearts. Once the heart ace disappears from dummy, the block in the club suit is fatal. But after a normal diamond lead or a spade lead, East can disentangle nine tricks.

. However, at one table the game went to North-South. After a normal one club opening and one diamond response, as shown, South bid two diamonds. This bid is best played as natural, showing diamonds, rather than as a cue-bid requesting partner to pick a suit. North trusted his partner by raising diamonds when West in the struggling baseball team. Williams, 52, fired as manager of the Mootreal Expos on Sept. 7, agreed to a 3-year contract with the Padres that will pay him an estimated $150,000 a year.

SAN DIEGO — Dick Williams has been named manager of the San Diego Padres, and he promised to instill a "winning hab-

Williams became manager of the Expos in 1977 after that team lost 107 games the previous season. He guided Montreal to 20 more victories in 1977 than in 1976, and by the third year the team was a contender in the National League East. This season the Expos came within a game of going to the World Series.

"The situation here is similar to what I found when I went to Mon-real," Williams said. "The Padres

Differences With Laker Coach Called Irreconcilable

Magic Johnson Asks to Be Traded

SALT LAKE CITY - Earvin (Magic) Johnson, an all-star guard with the Los Angeles Lakers, has asked to be traded, saying that his differences with the coach, Paul Westhead, were irreconcilable

Following the Lakers' fifth straight victory, 113-110 over Utah at the Salt Palace Wednesday night, Johnson said: "I can't play here anymore. I want to leave. I want to be traded. I can't deal with it no more. I've got to go in and ask him [the Laker owner, Jerry Buss to trade me."

Asked by stunned reporters if he was serious, Johnson said, "Defimitely. I haven't been happy all season. I've got to go. "I've seen certain things happening. I've sat back and haven't said anything, but I've got to go.

"It's nothing toward the guys [his teammates]. I love them and everybody. But I'm not happy. I'm just showing up. 1 play; I play as hard as 1 can, but I'm not happy. I'm not having any fun. I just want to go."

Asked if Westhead was the reason he wanted to leave Los Angeles, Johnson said, "Yeah. We don't see eye to eye on a lot of things. It's time for me to go."

In Los Angeles, Buss expressed

"I think everybody is very frustrated" he said. The main thing you learn the longer you're in sports is don't overact, don't panie, back and talk to everybody, then make the moves that are occessary based on what you've dis-

moves were possible, Buss said:
"An infinity of moves are possible. Which ones to choose, I doo't know. The first indication that Johnson and Westhead were at odds came moments after the game. As the Lakers were going to the dress-ing room, Westhead called Johnson aside and took him into an empty room across from the dressing room. When they emerged five minutes later, Westhead declined to comment on what he and Johnson had discussed.

"That's not an item for public commentary," he said.

Johnson also was reluctant to discuss the meeting but said it had no bearing on his desire to be traded. "It's just something that happened," he said. "It was just a little minor incident. He thought I wasn't listening to him." wasn't listening to him."

When informed by reporters of Johnson's comments, Westhead had no visible reaction, Asked if be is the first I've heard of it." On the possibility of a Johnson trade, Westhead said, "We hope that would never take place."

Complaints on Offense

Although Johnson entered the game against the Jazz leading the National Basketball Association in assists (10.3) and steals (3.2) and was second on the team in scoring (17.4) and rebounds (9.9), he has complained that he has not been able to get into the flow of Westhead's new offense.

In the fourth game of the season, against Phoenix, he took only seven shots. After a 26-point loss at San Antonio last week, he said he was having to create all his scoring opportunities off steals and fast breaks.

The next day, while the team was boarding a bus after arriving at the Houston Intercontinental Airport, Johnson sat alone on a concrete median with his head-phones on. "Sometimes I just have to sit in the sunshine and think, he said later.

Except in spurts, it has been obvious that Johnson has not been himself on the court. After the first half Wednesday night. Utah radio broadcaster Hot Rod Hundley asked a Los Angeles reporter, "Where's all that behind-the-back stuff? Where's all that fancy passing? What happened to that guy. He's dull. You have to work to make all that talent dull."

Narrow Victories

Even though the Lakers are on a winning streak after a 2-4 start and are only a half-game behind Port-land in the Pacific Division, the players have not kept it a secret that they are unhappy with West-head's offense. Their five straight victories have been decided by a total of 11 points, come of them by

Cast of Thousands

By Russell Baker

TEW YORK - Believe me. friend, it's no lark shooting a film in Washington, especially a multibillion-dollar opus like "The Trojan Horse." The phone goes from dawn to midnight.
"It's General Haig? You don't think our building a Trojan horse is going to scare the Russkies into starting a multi-billion-dollar horse race. hope . . You've heard we've signed Victor Mature to play the horse Not a word gest role in the movie . . . Are you serious, general? You really think you're better qualified to play the horse than anybody else in the business? . I see, I see . . . Let me speak to Ron and get back to you."

See what I mean? Everybody in this town has to be a star. "Yeah, Manny, what's the prob-lem? . . . Some Japanese journalists want to interview Mrs. Reagan inside the horse . . Oh, they've ahready interviewed Mrs. Reagan inside the horse. What's that to mie, Manny? . . . They've lost a thousand bucks? . . . I see. They didn't lose it, Dick Allen lost a thousand bucks . . . Who the hell is Dick Allen and what's he doing mith a thousand bucks incide my with a thousand bucks inside my

How about that? Only in Washington. They drop twenty or thirty billion at the Pentagon and never think about it, then lose a thousand bucks in a horse and cry.

"Sure I'll speak to Dave Stockman . . . Dave, a little problem on the script. We fill the horse up with millionaires and start to roll it into Troy and then Tip O'Neill tries to stop it . . . Yeah, I love it, Dave, Best script since Victor Mature brought down the temple in Samson and Delilah.' But then a huge serpent comes out of the sea crushes Tip and hanls him into the water . . . No, I like it fine. Dave, but Ron won't want to play it as a serpent. It's too much like the octopus role where the octopus goes after John Wayne in 'Reap the Wild Wind' . . . Could you rewrite, Dave? Just to make Ron happy . . . Well, you know, Dave, take the serpent coils off him or something . . . Make him something a little more western . . . Maybe a giant sea horse . Get back to me, will you?"

Now what? "General Haig, how can you say that? I've never waged guerrilla warfare against a secretary of state . . Hold on a second, Al. Ron's coming in on the red phone. "Sounding great this morning, big fellow. Really great . . All, that's too bad. Headache, huh? . . Well, I'm sorry about all that hammering on the horse outside your window. Horse, that's right. Horse . What horse?

Ron, baby, you haven't forgotten
we're making "The Trojan Horse"?
. Well listen, Ron, I would have told you about it sooner, but that . Sure, come right on down and you can look around inside the horse." Better get hold of my director in

Ed Meese said it wasn't worth waking you up for things like charge of borse effects. Sam, Ron's coming down to the horse. If the grips are shooting craps in there, clear 'em out... What? ... Saudi Arabians? The horse is full of Saudi Arabians? . . What do you mean they won't get out? . . . I see. Not until they get some AWACS planes? Impossible. Wait a second. I got an idea."

Let's see. Haig, Haig, Alexander. Right. "General? Trojan Horse' Control here. I can't promise you the horse role. You're not roomy enough to get 50 millionaires inside, but I have got a role for you!
You come out of the sea, up onto the beach, fierce and blood-curdling, but still full of wisdom and restraiot . . . Sure it's top billing . . . Now we need a few AWACS to get the Sandis out of the borse . . . Right, Al. They're our friends . . . Absolutely, Al. Real pals . . . "

That ought to do it. "Ron's coming up now? . . . Let me speak to him. . . . Hi Ron . . . Oh, the Arabs found a thousand bucks inside the horse, did they? That's Dick Allen's money . . .

"Well you don't have to get sore at me, Ron. I didn't tell the Saudis to show it to the newspaper people ... Hey, cool down. It'll make great publicity ..."

Peter Brook: A New Way of Staging 'Carmen'

PARIS — Earlier this season in Paris a thumping and lazily corny "Carmen" was given at the huge Palais des Sports. This week, a short and almost unbearably intense version of the opera opened at the tiny Bouffes du Nord, which serves as the theater of Peter Brook's Centre International de Créations Théâtrales. It is called "La Tragédie de Carmen." (Review page

"First of all we wanted clearly to mark the difference between this and the opera in its natural form." Brook said in the cafe next to the Bouffes. "We are clearly saying - with all respect to these gentlemen' - he points to the names of the composer Bizet, and the librettists Meilhac and Halévy on the program — "that it is an adaptation, an adaptation that's based on abstracting from the big opera a kernel. It is almost a classical tragedy in the sense of Corneille or Racine without the folklore, in other words without the chorus."

Three Pairs of Stars

The adaptation was made by Brook, Jean-Claude Carrière and Marius Constant, who is also the musical director. The opera's 14 musicians are at the back of the stage and three alphabetically listed singers play the roles of Carmen and Don José, enabling the company to give nightly performances. By the time the production ends on April 30, Brook reckons that it will have been seen by 80,000 people, far more than conventional productions in big opera houses.

As director of production at Covent Garden at the age of 22, Brook's first day's work was to take the repertory version of "Carmen" and see if he couldn't do something about it. There wasn't much be could do either about that production or about a theatrical form bound by convention and based on the star system at its most outrageous.

"I gave it up as something impossible. Even more than that, it was a real waste of energy because of the artistic and social conditions that seemed to make serious work impossible."

Brook went on to become a stage director of unrelenting boldness and intelli-gence. He has illuminated the classics as well as Broadway hits. In recent years his work with the center has become increasingly experimental and international. The last two productions were "The Conference of the Birds," based on a 12th-century Persian allegory, and, last year, a radiant "Cherry Orchard." At the end of 1982 his international acting troupe, now on leave, will present "The Mahabharata," an Indian epic about war that they have

does not mark a return to opera. "It's not a question of returning but of fulfilling. The International Center is here to create certain conditions that couldn't be found anywhere else. From our point of view we're just making theater and in a way putting the emphasis on restoring natural-

"What I think is interesting is that Bizet was inspired by Merimee, who had a horror of any wasted word, a sense of rigo-rous economy. Bizet's music reproduced a very exact description of the feeling of Merimée's characters, overlaid by Meilhac and Halévy, those highly commercial and competent men who did everything to camonflage the harsh and austere quali-ties of the work and turn it into something acceptable to the public but false to the play in a huge theater: Why, he wonders, should singers have to?

"Here they don't have to force. One of the unnatural things in opera is that they cannot sing intimately. Singers have to make an effort --- one voice screeching over 90 men playing with all their force." He blames the freakish, elephantine proportious of 19th-century opera singers on Wagner, whom he loathes.

"The unnatural strained violence of Wagner - that megalomaniac wish to create unnatural voices. To me there is no difference between a Wagnerian singer and a muscle man. The requirement is an inhuman one."

Stringent Process

The word "natural" that Brook uses about his "Carmen" obviously has nothing simple about it. In part it suggests a stringent process of stripping away ines-sentials so the original work emerges, vital "In 'The Cherry Orchard' the very thing that touched people was that it was classi-cal theater and seemed natural. And that grew out of something quite different — doing an improvisation around a carpet in

"In 'Carmen' we've tried to rediscover the characters. I think they're very different from what they are ordinarily considered. It was the same with The Cherry Orchard. Every work requires stereotypes at lightning speed. That's why tradition in the theater can be so destructive. Tradition should be alive, a flowing current. But tradition in opera is deification of the stereotype. It is mummification followed by deification."

It has become fashionable among certain theater and film directors to look on directing opera as the total theatrical experience. Brook thinks this is nonsense.
"We live in an impoverished world, that goes without saying, and our faculties are underexercised. No one lives fully intellectually or physically or emotionally."

"We can be totally exercised physically by dance — that's already worth going to the theater. And since no one can say we live rich emotional lives, to go to the op-era and be totally stirred is better than going to the corner cafe. But emotions "All this categorizing is meaningless. Theater is an all-embracing word and no single act of the theater can be all-embracing. Theater is millions of possible events that can be good or bad according to their needs and the different methods used. It's like going into a workshop and going mad about an electric saw because you've nev-onderful until you try to hammer a nail The spoken work has its place. So has the sung word. So has silence,"

Sean Connery Wins In Suit by Accountant.

Sean Connery, who played secret agent 007 in the early James Bond movies, won a High Court battle in London with his former accoun-tant. Kenneth Richards, a film pro-duction accountant who handled Connery's financial affairs for four years until the British star fired him in 1977, sued him for more than £100,000 ($190,000), asking for 2 percent of Connery's earnings from a total of 13 movies. But Richards, who lives in Lausanne, Switzerland, withdrew his claim and dropped his case after 36 days of court questioning by Conners. of court questioning by Connery's lawyer, Judge Sir Hilley Tablet said: "I have never witnessed a party's case so destroyed by cross-examination." The judge said Richards' case had been "wholly without merit."
